Planet Panels' Energy Performance Report Shows Annual Energy Savings of 25%

Eco-friendly homes proves to be more efficient than conventional building

Calgary, Alberta (September 16, 2010) - According to Planet Panels' Energy Performance Report, building a home using Planet Panels' products will save homeowners and homebuyers money on overall energy expenses.

In response to the growing concern over environmental responsibility, Planet Panels has developed cost-effective, alternative building materials that meet a zero draft spec, eliminating 90 per cent of the conventional thermal bridging. The Energy Performance Report indicates that homes built using Planet Panels products have lowered heating and cooling costs, and better long-term durability and performance.

In Canada, 60 percent of the energy consumed in homes is for 'space heating'. But, when compared to traditional 'stick and batt' construction, a home built with Planet Panels can be up to 55 percent more efficient—equally reducing the amount of greenhouse gases generated in the home.

Because of Planet Panels' holistic design of energy use in the home, homes built using Planet Panels' products are certified among the most energy efficient homes in Canada. Homeowners and buyers will have higher appraisal and resale values, receive CMCH guarantees (EnerGuide ratings of 77+), and are eligible for provincial government grants of up to $10,000.
